Dear Friends,

In the Summer 2007 edition of this humble newsletter we warned our readers of the economic challenges to come, citing the early indications of the collapsing home market, the subprime credit meltdown and the volatile cost of petroleum. A year and a half later we have seen millions of jobs lost, millions of homes in foreclosure and nearly a trillion dollars committed to propping up banks and corporations that we thought could never fail. And while the "experts" continue to argue over when this slide might hit bottom, nearly everyone is in agreement that there we are not there yet. For some of you, these challenges are no longer abstractions that lurk in other parts of your towns or in the news, but a cold reality that affects you personally.

Do not despair!

Whatever difficulties come our way, it is essential that we do not allow these temporary setbacks to drive us to lose focus, to forget that we are not defined by our jobs, our homes or any of the stuff we have bought and/or accumulated over the years. All of these possessions that we have held so dearly are only dust in the wind, as temporary and fleeting as a setting sun.

Luminous beings – that's what we are - as pure and perfect as the universal life energy that defines us and everything we know in this world. Our true selves are defined not by the goods we own, but by the love and compassion we share with one other, whether family, neighbors or the most pitiful of the people we will surely meet on what may be a very tough road ahead.

Just as the coldest winters pass to reveal green and verdant springtimes, so shall we see a return to a time of plenty. Through the months ahead, I urge each of you to apply your talents, skills and other resources to building a better life for our children and our children's children. Indeed, if we each take responsibility for our own little corners of the universe, we will see an end to this era in which we have focused on material wealth and a return to the importance of spending our lives growing good food and cherishing one another. Working together, we will see these hardships pass behind us and find ourselves in a world reborn and transformed.

For our part, we at Kelly Research Technologies pledge to be there to help you along the way, delivering the technology you need to make wise choices and implement your vision of success.

With kindest wishes to all of you,
