Each of us has the power to manifest real physical change in our lives through the application of focused intent of our minds. There are many ways to apply this focus. We can write down our goals, then develop the specific plans that will turn dreams into reality. We can spend time visualizing a future reality with crystal clarity and incredible detail. We can plan the routes that we wish to take, identifying the experiences and additional education that will be needed to reach our goals. We can literally speak it into being: pray for it, talk about it with others, sing it to the universe. In each of these methods, the time spent with the human mind focused on a possible future reality serves to channel energy to that possible outcome.

How is this possible? The information delivered through the focused intent of the human mind rings like a gong into the virtual particle flux that drives the heart of every atom, adding a degree of order to an otherwise random system of vibration and energy. This order increases the likelihood that the future reality we desire will be the one that comes to pass and tips the scales in our direction.

However, this does not mean that the universe will begin to grant our wishes like a genie out of a bottle. In fact, the universe usually responds by opening doors and granting opportunities, the vast majority of which will then require at least a little - and often quite a lot - of time and effort be expended before we fully realize the future realities that we seek. A great example in my life came a couple years ago when a friend of mine was looking to move into a particular neighborhood so she could live close to family, but was effectively priced out of the available properties. We spent quite a bit of time working on it, exploring options and possibilities. All at once an affordable building lot came into existence when a pair of adjacent properties in the neighborhood were split into four smaller lots by the owner. And then she was offered a free house, a cottage that needed to be moved from its old location to make way for new construction. Of course, moving the house required a new foundation and many other expenses to tie in the plumbing and electrical services. But at the end of the project she moved into her free house on a piece of property that was so new in the universe that it did not even have an address. Not only was it located in the area she desired, and the total of all costs was still tens of thousands of dollars cheaper than any of the available homes.

And sometimes your wish will simply be granted! Recently while preparing to travel to a radionics class, I found myself thinking that if my suitcase were just a few inches larger in each direction it would be just perfect for my needs, rather than being something of a struggle to get closed each time. After returning from a great trip, it was a few days before I got back into our little pick-up truck. And when I did, I was flabbergasted to find a new suitcase sitting in the passenger seat, one that was just like my old one... except a little larger. I later found out that my sister-in-law had given a bag she no longer needed to my wife the day before. Coincidence? Luck? Who cares! From my perspective the universe delivered unto me the gift of a great new suitcase just days after I asked for it.

Both of these examples illustrate a key factor in the manifestation process. We can speak our dreams to the universe, but we can almost never command the exact pathway by which the future reality will be manifest. This is why wishing to win the lottery never works, since that requires a very specific action from a specific set of ping pong balls at a specific point in time. Success is far more likely if we focus instead on the real outcomes that lottery winnings would deliver, like owning a new car or having the opportunity to travel, as there are countless pathways that the universe can take to make these happen. Last but not least, never forget to include some variation on the idea "thine will be done, no harm to anyone" to our programming. None of us wants to get that new car because the old one was destroyed when we were involved in a major traffic accident!

Have fun changing your life through focused intent!
